

REVIVAL COMMITTED TO EXCELLENCE

Award winning fibrous plaster company Revival Decorative Mouldings fully understand the importance of creating stunning plasterwork, having worked within some of the country's finest locations.

Established in 1998 and still headed by Director, Ian Waller, Revival are proud to have restored and repaired some of Britain's most treasured heritage plasterwork. By using the correct moulding in a historical context can produce simply breathtaking results.

Products from the 'Art of Revival' brochure are produced in conjunction with bespoke mouldings. Specialist repair and restoration of historic plasterwork using traditional methods and materials such as Lime Plaster are carried out by Revival's master craftsmen. Combining those skills with modern materials such as GRG, Jesmonite and GRP mouldings have attained Revival a high reputation in both commercial and residential Architecture.

Architectural mouldings and decorative elements such as cornicing and panel mouldings, a centre-piece, corbels and plaster arches, fire surrounds and recessed wall niches, columns and pilasters, over-doors and domes are all produced by Revival using casting plaster reinforced with hessian and timber lathes. Mouldings are produced to replicate the ever-changing face of interior decoration; each fashionable period of style added a striking new episode to the story, one movement of creativity blending into another – a constant revival of timeless heritage. Using the style time line on the new Revival website www.revivalplaster.co.uk you can place your property within the correct period and then identify the style of moulding relative to the period of your property.

Modern mouldings are cast from reverse moulds of silicon rubber, GRP and plaster. Traditionally plaster mouldings were run in-situ, with scotch brackets supporting lathes which were built up with coarse layers of horsehair reinforcement, topped off with a layer of lime plaster to provide the smooth finish. Enrichments were cast in small repeat sections and added to the plain run mouldings. Repeating this process allows Revival to build up a comprehensive understanding of restoration and repair.

During restoration work where original heritage plasterwork must be restored and replicated, detailed mouldings will often need the years of paint removing, Revival have mechanised this process by using a jet of steam to remove the layers of paint to reveal the enrichments before an imprint known as a squeeze can be taken. Using flexible silicon rubber allows an accurate reproduction to be repeated back in the workshop and the modelling and moulding process can begin.

This was recently demonstrated during the restoration and refurbishment of the world-renowned St James' Club in London. A luxury town house hotel which has been developed into one of London's premiere Boutique Hotels. Meticulous attention to detail was key throughout the project which took 14 months to complete. Revival's brief was to design; manufacture and install plaster mouldings sympathetic in style to the buildings original look, whilst incorporating the themes and designs reflected in the fixtures and fittings, an intelligent blend of traditional and modern. Revival provided solutions suitable for the varied requirements. Great care was taken in determining the size of the moulding required for each application. The main reception and restaurant were treated with a Cornice that included a picture rail for hanging fine examples of Impressionist, Expressionist and Cubist artwork. The marble stair-core that sweeps and curves up through six floors was fitted with elegant cornice embellished with the St James' Club motif.

Revival Decorative Mouldings have demonstrated a comprehensive multi-skill competency in the restoration of historic and listed buildings, refurbishment of exclusive hotel chains and installation of bespoke contemporary mouldings in leading flagship banks. Whilst working with Architects, Designers, Contractors and Private Clients alike, Revival pay meticulous attention to detail from the original commission through design, manufacture and to installation. Achieving perfection without compromise is the prerequisite message we receive from our clients, likewise Revival are committed to achieving excellence.
